Imagine the joy of possessing the rarest of all diamonds. The extreme scarcity of Australian natural Argyle pink diamonds makes them the most sought after diamonds for collectors across the globe.

The Argyle Diamond mine in the remote East Kimberley region of Western Australia produces virtually the entire supply of the world’s natural pink diamonds.

These exquisite gems are one of the true wonders of the world and reveal themselves from deep within the Earth’s crust, taking literally billions of years to form. With breathtaking colours ranging from a delicate blush to a vivid purplish pink and occasionally red, these amazing gems deserve only the most unique and beautifully paired settings to ignite their fire and sparkle.

The origin of the colour in natural pink diamonds is largely a mystery and the subject of ongoing debate. Unlike other coloured diamonds, where the colour is the result of trace elements in the earth, pink diamonds are not the result of an impurity. Rather, they are thought to obtain their colour as a result of extreme pressure beneath the earth’s surface.

To own a rare Argyle pink diamond is to own a unique piece of Australia, a family heirloom that will be treasured through future generations. Calleija Jewellers is proud to offer a magnificent selection of rare Argyle pink diamonds, perfectly enhanced by the artistry of John Calleija.
SELECT ATELIER

The rarity of Pink Diamonds demands that they be entrusted to only a selected circle of the world’s finest jewellers known as Argyle Pink Diamond Select Ateliers.

For the past two decades Calleija has been proud to showcase Argyle Pink Diamonds to the world. As a Select Atelier we are able to offer the very finest selection of pink diamonds available.

The Argyle mine is one of the only consistent producers of breathtaking pink diamonds that make up 90% of the world’s dwindling supply.

The Argyle mine has less than a decade left of pink diamond production.

Calleija are proud to be an Internationally Authorised Argyle Pink Diamond Select Atelier with the ability to offer you an unrivaled selection of these rare and highly collectable diamonds.
